SALEM NEWS.

John B. Webber Killed By a Norfolk and Western Train Sunday.

John B. Webber, a popular young man of Salem, was killed Sunday under most distressing circumstances. He had attended the afterneon services at the West Salem chapel, and in returning home jumped on one of the middle cars of a freight train coming east. When near the freight depot a sudden jerk of the train threw him between the care, which passed over both his legs, crushing them terr, bly and scattering fragments of flesh and bone along the track. He shouted loudly for assistance and when it came begged that some one would kill him.

He was then tenderly carried to the Western Train Sunday.

when it came begged that some one would kill him.

He was then tenderly carried to the depot and there laid on a bed where he was soon attended by Drs. M. C. Strickland and Stearnes, of Salem, and Dr. Gale, of Roanoke, who was on a professional visit here. Later Dr. Lenney, of Roanoke, was telegraphed for and came. These gentlemen did all that their skill could suggest, but the nervous shock was too great and he died shortly before midnight. Crowds of people flocked to the depot when the sad news was known, and many a prayer was offered in behalf of the dying lad, who seemed much comforted by the prayers of Rev. H. H. Kennedy and other devout friends. Those who were with him during his sufferings were surprised at his wonderful nerve, as he was conscious almost to the last and conversed pleasantly with his friends. Death seemed to have no terrors for him.

him.

Deceased was an orphan, 18 years of age, and was one of the most perfect specimens of physical manhood for his sge in town. Of late he had been going daily to Roanoke where he was in the employ of Levy & Alexander, clothiers. Being a member of the Jeff Davis Rifles his funeral was conducted by that organization with military honors. The funeral services took place at the Methodist Church and were conducted by Rev. H. H. Kennedy, who made a most touching address. The procession then formed with the drum corps first, followed by an escort of eight privates then formed with the drum corps first, followed by an escort of eight privates under command of Sergeant J.S. Stover, after which came the hearse. The pallbearers were privates, W. Wolfenden, Thomas Wolfenden, A. Burks, F. Obenchain, F. Hartigan and W. Dillard. The flower bearers were E. Strouse, W. A. Francis and W. Forsythe, of Salem, and E. A. Bennett, of Roanoke. A large number of citizens, as well as the Jeff Davis Rifles, under command of Capt. Griffin, also followed the remains to their last resting place in Rast Hill to their last resting place in East Hill Cemetery, where at the grave three vol-leys were fired by the military escort.

The Ministry Not a Profession, But a Vocation.

The truth of the statement made by the ministers and laymen returning from the Baltimore Conference two weeks ago that Grace Methodist Church had been remarkably fortunate in securing the services of Rev. Charles D. Bulla as pastor for this year, was clearly demonstrated Sunday morning, when this young minister preached his first sermon in his new field. The sermon, which lasted only 20 minutes, was an able and indeed a masterly discourse on the subject of "The Divine Call to the Ministry." He selected for the text. "We preach not for oursolves, but Christ the Lord," II Corinthians 4:5. Among the many good things in the sermon the following were noticed:

Our church believes in the doctrine of a divine call to the ministry, that the Holy Ghest does call men from time to time to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ for the edification of the church on earth and for the salvation of sinners. The church may select and ordain men to the ministry, but the church cannot make a preacher, neither can a man make a preacher out of himself. The ministry is not a profession, it is a vocation. Some preachers are like cannons that are found on dress parade; they might do a great deal of execution if any one was in range, but as it is they only make a great vibration on the atmosphere."

LOSS OF THE HAT. Nothing Makes a Man Madder Than be Have That Article Stolen.

"Nothing makes a man madder," said a philosepher, "than to lose his hat. To have it blown from his head in the street is bitter ambarrassment; to lose it accidentally is a severe misfortune, and to have it stolen is the deepest, blackest outrage that one can suffer. That is one crime which a man can never forgive. The theft of almost any other personal belonging may possibly be condoned or eventually forgotten. I don't know why it is that a man is so sensitive about having his a man is so sensitive about having his head covered. A woman will go bareheaded with perfect self-possession. Of course, she has more hair than a man, but then she will drape a shawl or a handkerehief over her head and feel perfectly comfortable. But remove a man's hat and you rob him at the same time of all confidence and self-respect. He feels utterly helpless and exposed to secorn and contumely, as well as to the scorn and contumely, as well as to the sun and wind. The merest apology for a cap or hat will suffice, but without it he feels lost. Possibly this sentiment is a relic of the barbaric days, when all mankind went helmeted, at the mercy of their enemies. At any rate, the habit of hat-wearing has been culti-vated so long that it has become second nature.
